Bearing in mind that, depending on the cause of the inflammation, doctors classify dermatitis into three types and also that we are all different and our skin will react in different ways compared to each other so there is no single "magical cure"

In an ideal world we would all be physically separated from coming into contact with any substance that is likely to irritate and damage our skin, but unfortunately the real world requires most of us to use or touch something that is likely to cause or exacerbate our skin problems and cause dermatitis.

Whether it be from some kind of leisure activity such as gardening or swimming or from our day to day life such as cooking, cleaning etc. Then start to think about working environments, builders, mechanics, factory work, doctors, nurses, hairdressers, farmers, postal workers etc etc.....the list goes on and on.

Irritant contact dermatitis is triggered by exposure to a chemical that is poisonous (toxic) or irritating to human skin. It is not an allergic reaction. Of the three classifications this is the one that will often react quickly to any preventative measures.

Try to isolate and then avoid coming into contact with the substance that's causing the problem. Often this is impractical so, if it is your hands that are suffering, the next step is to try different types of gloves that will protect you.

Unfortunately gloves are not always the answer as they can sometimes hinder whatever activity you are engaged in or, in some cases, make your skin condition even worse. The use of moisturiser at the end of any activity is always a good idea but there again that doesn't prevent the irritation occurring.

This is exactly where Derma Shield comes in; Derma Shield moisturises, nurtures and protects your skin despite repeated washing it is extremely effective. In fact in trials, success against skin problems such as dermatitis has been as high as 97%

Allergic contact dermatitis is an immune reaction that occurs only in people who are naturally oversensitive to certain chemicals. Often with this classification the first a sufferer know about the problem is long after the actual exposure took place for the first time.

As before, the first step is to try and isolate and then avoid coming into contact with the substance that's causing the problem. Easier said than done, especially if the reaction is quite delayed and not life threatening.

A dermatologist patch testing your skin with various chemicals will often narrow your search to a type of substance but it can still be a long time before you can be certain of what exactly is causing the dermatitis.

In the meantime think about what area of your skin was affected and if it was your hands then start investigating what types of gloves will work best for you. At this stage it is also possible to start using Derma Shield both with and without gloves depending on the particular circumstances.

Atopic dermatitis, or eczema as it is commonly known, is a chronic, recurring inflammatory skin disease that can be very hard to live with.

Often with this classification your skin will erupt in different places anywhere on your body. As with the other two classifications the first steps are to isolate and protect yourself using gloves where appropriate.

Unfortunately, sufferers are often reduced to just controlling the worst effects of the symptoms. If your condition plagues you with dry, flaky and itchy skin then the Aloe Vera in Derma Shield will break the itch, scratch, itch, cycle. Derma Shield will also protect your skin from most day to day external irritants that will cause your skin to flare up.

I fully appreciate, not only the physical aspects of having a condition such as dermatitis, but also the emotional impact the condition has on you and your family.

Users constantly tell us how their quality of life has greatly improved since using Derma Shield. It has relieved the pain and constant suffering that they endure and they are no longer embarrassed and self conscious about their dermatitis damaged skin.
